Where Two Americans Were Executed

The United States government took prompt action in the disturbance in Nicaregua following the execution of two Americans, Leroy Camaon and Leonard Grace, who were put to death as robets by order of President Jose Santos Zelaya. It was announced in Managua that the men were captured while planting mines and that they had explosives and electrical apparatus in their possession which the reliefs intended to use in blowing up a Nicaraguan gunboat. Both men are said to be soldiers of fortune. Cannon was a resident of Harrisburg, Pa., and is said to have engaged in a revolution in Honduras. Tale is denied by lets friends. The Navy Department at once ordered the Vicksburg and the Des Moines, two warrhips, to the scene of the trouble, and it is declared at Washington that unless there is a prompt and adequate explanation on the part of Zelaya marlines will occupy the ports of his country. At all events, it is believed that the United States will put a quietus to the revolution. It is asserted in dispatches from Managua that Cannon and Grace were iried by court martial and given every chance to prove their innocence. This is not believed at Washington.
